ran through the city crying "Death to the French!" Even the churches proved no sanctuary, and all the French on the island were slaughtered, without distinction of rank, age, or sex. The number that perished is estimated in all at about 800. These words then became the motto of the islanders: "Morte alle Francese Italia anello," (Death to the French is Italy's cry.) The initial letter of each word, M. A. F. I. A. spells the modern and common name of the dreaded island society.
